A bit of history:

The first-generation MacBook Air was a 13.3"-only model, initially promoted as the world's thinnest notebook.[9] It featured a custom[10] Intel Merom CPU and Intel GMA graphics. In late 2008, the CPU was updated to a faster, non-custom Penryn CPU and integrated Nvidia GeForce graphics while the hard drive capacity was increased and the micro-DVI video port was replaced by the Mini DisplayPort.[11] A mid-2009 refresh, introduced alongside the MacBook Pro family, featured a slightly higher-capacity battery, and a faster Penryn CPU.[12]

On October 30, 2009, Apple released a 13.3" model with improved battery life, screen, and battery, and a 13.3" model with improved battery life, screen, and battery. The new model was a mid-2009 refresh, introduced alongside the MacBook Pro family, featuring a slightly higher-capacity battery, and a faster Penryn CPU.[13]
